20th November
Dear Harshi,
How are you? Hope everything is ok. I am a bit busy these days as I am getting ready for my final examination.
By the way, we donated some books to the public library in our area. You know my birthday was yesterday and this year my family decided to do this meritorious work to celebrate the day. The librarian Mrs . R.S. Rathnayaka is a good friend of my mother. She appreciated our work and gave me a gift voucher as a birthday gift. I didn't invite my friends this time but hope to get their participation next year.
Give my loving regards to your family. Write to me soon.

Test 07: Read the paragraph and answer the questions given below.

There was a noise downstairs. They heard it quite clearly like a hiccough, only louder-More like a mighty squeak, perhaps. It was the refrigerator.

They both knew it meant that Gee was up and that she had opened the refrigerator to get milk. Every day that was the first noise in the house and usually the last, too. Nobody knew why the old refrigerator chirped, or even when it was going to do it. It had been doing it for over twenty years, ever since Gee's mother, Mamie, bought it second – hand at the Country Fair, where it was hitched up on display. Mamie said that's why she chose it. "It just seemed to lean out and say 'yoo-hoo' when I went by," Mamie told them.

Pip narrowed his eyes and looked at Emma suspiciously. "Emma," he said slowly, as the truth dawned on him. "That is the refrigerator. That means Gee has just gotten up. Gee is always the first person up in this house. Gee is always up at six a.m.! WHAT ARE YOU DOING IN HERE?"

"I only wanted to see the farm at dawn – the colours were so pretty," Emma said nervously. "But you took so long to wake up you missed it." She chewed harder on the tail of her braid.

a) Themade a loud noise.

b) Why did Gee open the refrigerator?

.....

c) Does anybody know the reason for chirping of the refrigerator?

.....

d) Why did Pip miss the chance to see the beauty of the farm at dawn ?

.....

Test 15

Read the following text and answer the questions given below.

(8 marks)

MATTHEW Cuthbert and the sorrel mare jogged comfortably over the eight miles to Bright River station. He didn't like all women except Marilla and Mrs. Rachel; he had an uncomfortable feeling that they, the women, were secretly laughing at him. He may have been quite right in thinking so, for he was an odd-looking personage, with an ungainly figure and long iron-gray hair ever since he was twenty.

When he reached Bright River there was no sign of any train; he thought he was too early, so he tied his horse in the yard of the small Bright River hotel and went over to the station house. The long platform was almost deserted; the only living creature in sight being a girl who was garbed in a very short, very tight, ugly dress of yellowish-gray. She was sitting on a pile of shingles at the extreme end of the platform. Matthew, did not notice that it was a girl, sidled past her as quickly as possible without looking at her. She was sitting there waiting for something or somebody.

Matthew met the station master locking up the ticket office getting ready to go home for supper. He looked worn-out after working for so long. Matthew asked him if the five-thirty train would soon be along.

"The five-thirty train has been in and gone half an hour ago," answered that brisk official. "But there was a passenger dropped off for you—a little girl. She's sitting out there on the shingles."

"I'm not expecting a girl," said Matthew.

The station master whistled.

"Guess there's some mistake," he said. "Mrs. Spencer came off the train with that girl and gave her into my charge. Said you and your sister were adopting her from an orphan asylum and that you would be along for her presently. That's all I know about it."

"I don't understand," said Matthew helplessly, feeling really upset. "It's a boy I've come for. We want to adopt a boy, not a girl. I can't take this girl home."

"Well, you'd better ask the girl," said the station-master carelessly. "Perhaps she might be better than the boy you wanted."

He walked away and Matthew was left to do what was harder for him than bearding a lion in its den—walk up to a girl—a strange orphan girl—and demand of her why she wasn't a boy. Matthew groaned in spirit as he turned about and shuffled gently down the platform towards her.

She had been watching him ever since he had passed her and she had her eyes on him now. Matthew was not looking at her and would not have seen what she was really like.

When she saw Matthew coming towards her, she stood up, grasping the handle of a shabby, old-fashioned carpet-bag; the other she held out to him.

"I suppose you are Mr. Matthew Cuthbert of Green Gables?" she said in a clear, sweet voice. "I'm very glad to see you. I was beginning to be afraid you weren't coming for me."

He could not tell this child with the glowing eyes that there had been a mistake; he would take her home and let Marilla do that. She couldn't be left at Bright River anyhow, no matter what mistake had been made, so all questions and explanations might as well be deferred until he was safely back at Green Gables.

"I'm sorry I was late," he said shyly. "Come along. The horse is over in the yard. Give me your bag."

1. State whether the following statements are true or false. Put a tick (✓) in the relevant column.

	True	False
