Antarctica is the fifth largest of the earth's seven continents. During the winter it doubles its size because of the large amount of sea ice that forms at its edges.

Antarctica is more than 95% covered in ice, and contains about 90% of the world's fresh water. Because of its thick ice cover, it is the highest of all continents. The snow and ice of Antarctica are the purest in the world. The general isolation from the remainder of the world has allowed it to avoid the industrial pollution common to the other continents.

Antarctica is the coldest continent. The lowest temperature ever recorded anywhere on earth -88.3°C was in 1960 at the Soviet Vostok Station. It has an annual rainfall of just 7cm and therefore it can be classified as a true desert. It has two species of flowering plants and virtually not flying insects. A large number of whales feed on the rich marine life seals and birds live and breed but the prominent inhabitant, penguin are over twelve million.
